Record-breaking exhibition at this year's Embedded Conference Scandinavia

This year's edition of the Embedded Conference Scandinavia will be a record-breaking exhibition with 90 exhibitors from all over Europe.

The ninth edition of the Embedded Conference Scandinavia further strengthens its position as Northern Europe's leading meeting place for the international electronics industry. With a comprehensive conference program, the second edition of the M2M Summit Scandinavia as well as the record-breaking exhibition with over 90 exhibitors, the contents of the ECS is broader than ever.

- "We are very proud to once again be able to present a bigger, better and more comprehensive ECS than ever before," says Lena Norder, CEO of Swedish Electronics. "We have, over the years managed to continue to develop ECS and this year, we believe that we offer a better ECS than ever."

During the 4th and 5th of November, Sweden's and other Nordic countries electronics industry with a focus on embedded technology will meet at Kistamässan in Stockholm, Sweden. ECS has grown and evolved to become a leading international event. A large proportion of the exhibitors, over half of the speakers and many visitors come from countries other than Sweden. At ECS 2013 participants came from 25 different countries.

- "The ECS program evolved this year to become both more profound and educational," says Project Manager Lars Johan Larsson. "Software testing is a full day with modeling, verification and simulation. M2M and the Internet of Things are hot topics that get two full days," continues Lars Johan. "The number of workshops has expanded greatly. Examples are Linux where ENEA builds a Yocto based ecosystem and KTH has accumulated experience of 'best practices.' Together with Nohau, we are developing an M2M application for data collection."

Embedded Conference Scandinavia is arranged by the Swedish Association of Electronics with the Embedded Technology section in cooperation with BraMässor Sverige AB and Elektronik i Norden (Electronics in the Nordics) November 4th and 5th at Kistamässan, Stockholm, Sweden.
